

Clayton Moore You're a career military man in the truest sense. You enrolled in the naval academy at a young age and was at the top of your class. You retired after fighting in Somalia and witnessing the atrocities there. You've recruited this team of mercenaries from mates that have served for you in past missions over the years. Currently you were hired by Rhea Khan to extract her and a cartel drug chemist. You've worked on assignments with Rhea before and know her to be demanding and greedy. But she's a patriot. So you keep her cover and don't inform your team that she's your employer.

Trip Lyne: One of the best point men you've served with. His Cajun food is some of your favorite stuff.

Ivan Hadd: He served as your Heavy Weapons Specialist in Somalia. You're trying to help him cope.

Richard O'Shay: Jesuit Priest and one hell of a Commo Tech. His counsel for you and the troops has helped heal numerous mental scars.

Penelope Sylan: Drug Chemist that Rhea needs help smuggling to the Bahamas.

Rhea Khan: You've served with this CIA spook in the past on covert missions. One spunky chick. Easy on the eyes too.
